SCOPE OF TASK:

Developing an understanding of true and false will assist children with grasping concepts about honesty and dishonesty. Lying is often one of the first signs a young child has developed an awareness of people's feelings and beliefs and is developmentally appropriate.

1. During group time ask the children if they know what true and false is? Connections can be made with telling the truth and lying, and what is real and not real.

2. Use the flashcards attached to ask children a series of questions. The more incorrect and exaggerated the questions posed to children will assist children in grasping true and false scenarios. Some examples include:

	This is a yellow banana
	This is a blue truck

3. When making incorrect or exaggerated statements ask the children to determine if they are true or false/truth or lies. Making funny statements that are correct or incorrect are also developmentally appropriate. For example:

	The orange kangaroo is hopping in the bush

4. Give the children the flashcards and ask them to tell true or false statements to also gauge their understanding.

In communication with parents/caregivers share with them your exploration of true and false concepts to reinforce learning in the home environment.
